

General Information:

The Danube Travel Information Database was produced as a deliverable in the Interreg Danube Transnational Programme Project "Transdanube Travel Stories".

The aim of the project is Recognising the extensive cultural and natural heritage, the Transdanube Travel Stories project aims to support sustainable tourism in the Danube Region through the implementation of innovative marketing concepts (new narratives/narratives) and sustainable mobility management tools.

How to make use of the Danube Travel Information Database:

There is a separate Excel worksheet for each country in the Danube Region that is already being sustainably developed in the Transdanube Travel Stories project.

In the upper section, sustainable mobility offers are collected on a national level, such as train providers and long-distance buses. Below are all destinations of the six developed trails in the respective country. For each destination, links and information for different sustainable mobility offers are collected.

In this way, you can quickly and easily gain an overview and find information for sustainable mobility offers between and within the destinations and communicate it to tourists, for example.

Border crossing into Liberland is often prevented by Croatian border guards, although you can still try getting in as the border isn't clearly marked. There are reports of people attempting to enter the area being arrested by Croatian authorities. Getting in from Serbia by boat is reported to be more convenient, though the Serbian government considers it illegal and travellers attempting to use this route have reportedly been detained as well. Liberland is connected to Croatia by road, but the roads are in bad condition, so it may not be possible to reach Liberland by car — in which case, you have to continue by foot. There is no regular bus connection to Liberland; however, you can take a train or bus to Osijek, take another bus to Zmajevac and then continue by foot or by bike. Bus connections between Osijek and Zmajevac are very infrequent, though — only twice a week. You can also cycle or hike to Liberland from Osijek (about 30 km). Attention: There are no accommodation facilities, restaurants or supermarkets in Liberland. If you go there on your own and want to stay over night, you must bring a tent. There are also no railways or public transport in Liberland.
